BELLEVUE DANSANT

Large Audience Attended the Afternoon Dance on Saturday.

Certainly it would have been hard to find a larger or more representative audience than that gathered on Saturday afternoon at the Bellevue-Stratford at the dangant, which was given in the ballroom. Double rows of tables were placed about the walls and the boxes and balcony were also filled with tables. Society had gathered in full force to watch the dancing of Maurice and Miss Florence Walton, of New York, and society was not disappointed.

Mrs. May Temple, who charepones the afternoon dansants, had matters so efficiently arranged it was possible for all the more than 700 guests to see and to hear, for Maurice taught the fox trot and skating walts as he demonstrated them.

Mrs. Beverly Potter and Mrs. Henry Augustus Berwind entertained at one table. Another party included Dr. and Mrs. W. Reynolds Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. E. Rittenhouse Miller, Mr. and Mrs. R. Wilson McCredy, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Earle White, Mrs. Burton Price.

At another table were Mr. and Mrs. Paul Denckla Mills. Miss Elia Brock, looking like a little fairy in her dainty frock of brown velvet and lighter brown sik, which was topped with the dearest little silk hat trimmed with tiny flowers, was noted, as usual, dancing exquisitely.

Quite a number of the debutantes were there. Miss Evelyn Chew wore a smart costume of dark blue cloth and brown fur.

Mrs. James D. Winsor, Mrs. Edward Sydenham Page and Mrs. Adolph Rosengarten formed a party at another small table. A wonderful trotteur of ross-colored velour was worn by Mrs. Henry Pepper Vaux. The skirt was plain, but made with a wide flure and the coat was fastened with one large buting Mrs. Vaux wore brown fure and a small

PHILOPATRIAN BALL

Annual Affair to Be Given at the Bellevue-Stratford This Year.

Larger and more spectacular than any of its predecessors, the annual reception of the Catholie Philopatrian Literary Institute, which for 48 years has marked the close of Catholic soclal activities on the eve of the penitential season of Lent, will be held tonight in the Bellevue-Stratford. Finishing touches were given to the plans of the Ball Committee at a meeting in the institute headquarters, 1411 Arch street, yesterday afternoon.

The Philo reception has been recognized as the leading Catholic social function of the year, and the officers of the institute have put forth every effort to add to the brilliance of each successive affair. In connection with the planning of the 1915 ball, a rousing membership campaign has been conducted, with the result that the addition of scores of new members has interested many of the younger set of Catholic church circles in the success of this year's

Men distinguished in public life will grace the occasion by their presence, the acceptances received from city and State officials having been more numerous than in any previous year. Simplicity will characterize the decorative scheme. The illuminated "Philopatrian" emblem, which has been a traditional feature of the ball, will predominate over the floral dis-

Several innovations mark the coming reception. The scene of the dance, which has always been held at the Academy of Music since the beginning, has been transferred to the Bellevue, Stratford. The elimination of the auction sale of boxes, always hitherto held on the eve of the ball, is another departure from time-honored practice. An additional novelty will be the demonstration of standardised modern dances on the ballroom floor during the height of the reception by Professor Coll and his two sons and their partners. The reception will formally open at 10 o'clock, as usual, with the grand march, which will be led by Mr. and Mrs. James F. Herron. Mr. Herron is president of the institute and chairman of the Ball Committee, as well as grand conductor. Judge James E. Gorman who, with Mrs. Gorman, led the grand march last year, will act as chairman of the Reception Committee, while Hugh M. Donnelly and Frank A. Mulherin will serve as aides to the grand conductor.

The Ball Committee, in charge of all the plans for the function, is composed of James F. Herron, chairman; Joseph A. Brady, J. M. J. Costello, James H. Crumble, H. M. Donnelly, Joseph L. Durkin, John A. Eichman, Jr., James A. Hamilton, Robert J. McNally, Dr. James J. McNulty, E. J. Mulhern, John A. Murphy, Walter L. Murphy, Maurice Nugent, M. A. O'Neill, Richard Schwoerer, George A. Williams, John F. Skelly, treasurer; John F. Costello, William J. Barry, Jr., and Joseph L. Tinney, secretaries.

The floor directors are James V. Bradley, W. I. Campbell, Frank P. Carr, M. J. Coghlan, M. L. Conneen, John J. Cronin, Joseph A. Cunningham, William T. Doyle, Gerald A. Dougherty, John F. Fitzharris, Dr. I. L. Fitzpatrick, Thomas J. Murphy, Francis D. Gill, Joseph F. Hamilton, William E. Haney, James J. Langton, J. Edward Lentz, E. J. McCaffrey, Dr. William J. McKinley, P. A. INVESTIGATING RICHES

In spite of our democratic theory that all men are born free and equal, there is an irresistible glamour about great wealth. The Federal Industrial Commission has been holding hearings all over the United States for over a year, but not until it began to call our superlatively-multi-millionaires to the stand did it step into the full glare of the man in the New Republic (1):

In addition to quizzing our "malefactors of great wealth" on how they treat their employes and how they interpret that maxim about being their brother's keeper, the com-mission has decided that the several founda-tions established by these same men are also proper subjects for investigation in its quest for "the causes of industrial unrest."

Nine current periodicals comment on various aspects of these rich men and their camels as they try to get through the eyes of needles. Five defend the foundations and their founders. One is neutral. Three are antagonistic in tone. One of the most entertaining articles is a description of young Mr. Rockefeller on the stand by Walter Lippman in the New Republic (1):

Mr. Rockefeller seemed terribly alone. There was an atmosphere of no quarter. A large crowd watching intensely every expression of his face, about 20 cameras and a small regiment of newspaper men, a shorthand reporter at his elbow, and confronting him the commissioners, led by the no means reassuring Mr. Walsh—except for an indefatigably kindly police sergeant who gave him one glass of water after another, not much was done to pamper the witness.

From the first Mr. Rockefeller was on the

From the first Mr. Rockefeller was on the defensive. To the charge that he has en-forced an industrial absolutism in Colorado, he realised with much colorado.

he replied with much feeling:

"While it has been said that I have exercised an absolute authority in dictating to the management of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, it has also been said that I have been too indifferent, and that as a director I should have rector.

nave been too indifferent, and that as a director I should have exercised more authority. Clearly both cannot be true."

Yet it seemed to me as I listened to him that both could be true, and that in fact it was just such a dilemma which was the truth. For 10 years Mr. Rockefeller had not seen his property, his relation to it was by letter and by conference with the officials. What he knew of it must have come to him from them knew of it must have come to him from them and, as he has confessed, he trusted their word. Now when we speak of the despotism of the Czar of Russia, we do not mean that he in person acts despotically in every prov-ince of his empire. We mean that a des-potic hierarchy exists owning allegiance to him as its titled head. We know that if the Czar wished to liberalize his government he would find himself hampered by his subor-dinate officials. But he has to bear the re-sponsibility for the things that are done in his name, and because he has potential power he is blamed not only for what he does but for what he doesn't do.

If first impressions count for anything, I should describe Mr. Rockefeller as a weak despot governed by a private bureaucracy which he is unable to lead. He has been thrust by the accident of birth into a position where he reigns but does not rule. His intellectual helplessness was the amazing part of his testimony. Here was a man who represented an agglomeration of wealth probably without parallel in history. He is the supreme negation of all equality and a symbol of the most menacing fact in the life of the republic. Yet he talked about himself on the commonplace moral assumptions of a small business man. small business man.

While not going into details about it, Town Topics suggests the opposite point of view in a paragraph (2):

in a paragraph (2):

Lawson, a strike leader under 14 indictments for murder, two for assault with intent to kill, one for arson, one for conspiracy in restraint of trade and eight for contempt of court, was permitted to testify before the Federal Commission on Industrial Relations, and described J. D. Rockefeller, Jr., as "incompetent, insincere and reckless," "Insincere?" That is a matter of opinion, and Lawson's opinions have no value. "Reckless?" That is the week's best laugh. But "incompetent"—would Lawson have blackguarded him in this way if, in their interview, he had not found Mr. Rockefeller fully competent to take care of himself and his property? Let Mother Jones and Rockefeller, Jr., settle it.

Whose Money Is It?

The Survey, quoting from a speech made by Frank Walsh, chairman of the commission, gives some interesting figures (3):

The benefactions of the world last year amounted roughly to $300,000,000, principally gifts made in the United States. The income gifts made in the United States. of one great foundation was $14,000,000, or four times more than the appropriation spent by the Government of the United States in Speaking of Mr. Walsh, Life comments with accustomed levity (4):

No one should object to his having what fun he can with the foundations while the money lasts that his commission lives on. There is nothing sacred about the foundations. It happened that in a curious period in the development of the country two exceptionally canny men diverted into their own possession such an altogether absurd superfluity of money that, hardy as they were they were embarrassed by it, and finally, after a good deal of pain and many minor reliefs, threw up, each of them, a foundation, and have since—so one hears—rested somewhat easier. And another foundation was created out of the leavings of an amazing old skin-flint who had all the fun he wanted in getting 200 millions together and left them to his widow to try to spread them around again. The wonderful thing about the foun-No one should object to his having what ting 200 millions together and left them to his widow to try to spread them around again. The wonderful thing about the foun-dations is that they are in such good hands and do so much good. They actually seem to do more good than harm, which is an unusual record for money, which is so very apt in large quantities to do more harm than good.

Leslie's Weekly does not accept Chairman Walsh as philosophically (5):

These are serious accusations. Congress, in its eager desire to investigate men and things, should inquire into the antics and actions of Mr. Walsh. That he should pubactions of Mr. Walsh. That he should publicly assail the generous and philanthropic foundations established by Carnegie, Firsch, Sage and Mr. Rockefeller and seriously propose that the money of the taxpayers be used instead of the funds so liberally provided by these foundations, is a most astounding exhibition of asininity. In justice to himself, President Wilson should reorganize the commission, or demand its abolition as a useless expense and menace to the prosperity of the country. It is not surprising that the intemperate language of a Federal official like Mr. Walsh should be regarded by the unemployed as a warrant for rioting and blood-shed.

And the Independent (6), in a general justification of the foundations, writes:

By far the larger share of expenditure un-der these trusts has been thus far for the promotion of two objects, namely (1), education through schools, colleges and universi-ties, brought up to relatively high standards of efficiency at the demand of benefactors, and (2), scientific research. These two results would be ample justification of these foun-
